ABOUT OCCAM'S RAZOR

Alone in what was once a thriving metropolis suddenly converted to dense forest, William Hockam quickly learns that he is responsible for wiping humanity from the face of the Earth. After a gust of wind sets in motion events leading to this desolate place, William has much to convey and is not shy explaining through typing and sketching how the end came to be, with plans to add this final literary effort to the vast library he has been entrusted with. That is, if he doesn't destroy the library, and himself, first.
